THE WORLD THIS WEEK
By
Robert Patterson

• The closing days of this year of violence find yet another nation about to be wiped off the map of Europe as flyweight Finland vainly resists assault by her giant neighbor. Since New Year's dawn of 1939 broke upon a troubled world, nations, no less than soldiers and civilians, have been numbered among the casualties of aggression. Within the span of a few short months, Czecho-Slovakia, Albania, and Poland, have been obliterated, and the Baltic states, as independent nations, have disappeared as that continent proceeded to enact the latest chapter in its centuries-old drama of the sheep and the wolves. America played a big enough role in that drama 20 years ago to decide that in the future, wherever her sympathies might lie, her soldiers would lie in American soil—not Europe's!

• California now becomes the next proving ground of the government's food stamp plan when that program goes into operation next week in San Francisco, the largest city in the country in which the plan has yet been tried. In Rochester, N. Y., where it was first put to the test, the food stamp plan is bringing merchants $80,000 additional business monthly. If San Francisco—double Rochester's size — should do twice as well, it would be no occasion for surprise, for this is one plan that has rung the bell. Avoiding any untried schemes, government in this case took its cue from a sound, down-to-earth method worked out by private enterprise. The beginning of a broad-scale effort to tap new outlets for farm produce and aid low-income families with precious savings dates from the farmer-consumer campaigns launched several years ago by food chain stores. Wisely using the existing facilities of distribution in private enterprise, and turning its back on Utopian experimentation, the food stamp program has followed the blue-print of a proven method—and won laurels from virtually everyone.

• Homebuilding, mainspring of the recovery drive, continues to make California the bright spot of the nation. Little gray homes in the west, springing up like mushrooms after spring rain, increased in number by 38,267 during the first nine months of the year, according to government reports last week. How good a record is that? With the sole exception of New York, which has twice this state's population, California has built more new homes this year than any state in the Union!

• Since the beginning of time, people have tapped the land and the earth beneath it for food, fuel, and shelter. Now the day is envisaged when, to a greater extent than ever before, the ocean will be exploited for its vast reserves of wealth. Speaking in Los Angeles recently, Dr. Claude E. ZoBell, Scripps Institution of Oceanography scientist, pointed out that this country "has taken little advantage of its marine resources, has done little to protect them, and virtually nothing to develop them." In contrast, he cited Japan's enterprise in extracting from the ocean—sometimes very close to our own shores!—nearly one-third of her natural resources! Though the time is doubtless distant before ravages of drought and erosion ever force America to look seaward for most of her sustenance and new sources of power, it is encouraging to know this vast domain of natural wealth and unharnessed energy lies at hand—available as a great emergency store-house.

Lester Merrill, well known Winchester road rancher, is from last reports getting along nicely after a fall from a pruning ladder last Thursday that put him in the hospital with two seriously injured vertebrae.

Erland Williamson spent several days in San Francisco last week.

Local Artists In San Jose Aud Exhibit

A free exhibition of their original oil, water color, and pastel paintings has been opened this week in the San Jose Civic auditorium by Santa Clara county artists.

Exhibitors include Frank Cutting and Otis Hyde of Campbell, Winnie Chamberlin of Los Gatos, Estelle Hoisholt, Alice W. Marquardt, and Roland Rice of Saratoga; Dorothy Stelling of Sunnyvale, Dan Mendelowitz of Stanford university, and Miss Leeana Fisher and Milton Lanyon of San Jose. Most of these artists were represented at the Golden Gate International exposition at Treasure island.

Cutting and Hyde of Campbell have frequently exhibited in the Stanford Art gallery, as well as in other leading galleries of the state, and are well known for their California landscapes. Miss Hoisholt and Miss Fisher are art instructors at San Jose State college. Dan Mendelowitz is an art instructor at Stanford university. Miss Chamberlin is head of the art department at Los Gatos Union High school and Miss Stelling that of the Fremont Union High school near Cupertino. Milton Lanyon is a well known portrait painter of Carmel and San Jose.

Mrs. Marquardt, who recently came here from the Phillipines, won much favorable comment from art critics for her fine pastel portraits of Philipino native types. She traveled through the islands of the Sulu sea painting natives for a steamship company. Her husband is editor of the Free Press of Manila. Roland Rice's colorful portraits of wildflowers and woodland scenes were enjoyed by thousands at the exposition.

The exhibition will continue daily from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. through next Saturday, Dec. 16. This is the first of semi-annual exhibitions planned by Santa Clara county artists.

Importance of Eearly Discovery In T. B. Stressed

Discovery of tuberculosis patients and getting them to bed early enough to save their lives and keep them from infecting others is the big problem of the Santa Clara County Tuberculosis association, according to William P. Butler, president of the organization.

Help to Protect Your Home from Tuberculosis

In an appeal to the public to purchase the Christmas seals sent them during the sale now being conducted by the association, Butler said:

"The need is for more effective programs for uncovering early cases of disease and bringing these cases to treatment at a time when recovery is less costly and more certain.

"Nearly one-fourth of all patients entering tuberculosis institutions die there, chiefly because their infection has been discovered too late for treatment. When found in the early stages, tuberculosis can almost always be arrested.

"We have the means for diagnosing tuberculosis in its earliest forms, even before actual symptoms have appeared. Christmas seals finance the use of these case-finding methods. They examine school children and adults to find early tuberculosis, and they employ follow-up nurses who attempt to find the source of each case of disease.

"If the death rate from tuberculosis is to continue to decline, it is important that the 1939 Christmas seal sale be a success."

Guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Waltrip and family on Esther avenue Sunday, were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Foster of Boulder Creek.

HAPPY LANDING?

Parent-Teacher Group Celebrates At Xmas Festival

The Campbell Union High School P.-T. A. held its annual Christmas Festival in the school auditorium the evening of Dec. 13. Suitable music was furnished by the high school orchestra, under the direction of A. A. Thielke, and the a cappella choir, under the direction of C. P. Klassen.

A series of tableaux, depicting the birth of the Christ child, were ably presented by a group of students, with the choir furnishing a musical background off-stage.

During the brief business session, it was voted to add the lighting of the tennis courts of the school to the lighting fund project, with the understanding that the money already accumulated in the fund be used for that purpose as soon as the work can be started.

Following adjournment, refreshments were served to over 200 in the gymnasium, and the rooms of the school were thrown open for inspection by anyone interested.

P.T.A. Card Party Monday Evening

A "traffic safety" card party will be held by the Campbell Union High Schaal P.-T. A. in the gymnasium of the school, Monday evening, Dec. 18. There will be a turkey for every four tables, and many other valuable items of merchandise.

The theme of the party is safe driving, which the P.-T. A. is particularly stressing during the holiday season. Fred Hugbuck, head of the San Jose traffic school will be master of ceremonies, and the state highway patrol will be represented by Sergeant Sansone of the traffic squad.

Playing will start promptly at 8 o'clock and the public is cordially invited. Refreshments will be served.

RITES FOR R. J. BILLIOU WILL BE HELD FRIDAY

R. J. Billiou passed away at O'Connor sanitarium Wednesday and funeral services will be held Friday at 9 a. m. in the Monahan chapel with a requiem mass in St. Patrick's church at 9:30.

Older residents of Campbell remember the Billiou family as they lived here for several years in the house at the corner of Rincon and Winchester, where Alvin Frey now lives and conducts a service station.

Their only son Adelbert died as a very young man, but his wife and three daughters, survive, Mrs. Leona Billiou, and Mrs. Louise Lovely of San Jose, Mrs. Juliette Hartel and Mrs. Edith Ahart of San Francisco.

High School Xmas Program

Closing exercises for the Christmas holiday will be held by the Campbell Union high school Friday at 1:30 p. m.

A program similar to that which was done so impressively for the P.-T. A. Wednesday night will be presented.

Christmas music will be provided by the a cappella choir, directed by C. P. Klassen; the orchestra, directed by A. A. Thielke, and tableaus, arranged by Miss Mary Lewis.

Annual Meeting of Guild Held Today

The final meeting of the Congregational Guild was held this afternoon in the parlors of the church with all three groups united. Reports for the year are presented at this time, groups rearranged and officers elected.

Christmas luncheons have been enjoyed by the separate groups, thus concluding their individual efforts for the year.

DONALD DUCK by Walt Disney

Dick Morton Member of Bar

Among the legal aspirants who took the state board examination in October was Richard Morton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herold Morton of Campbell. Early this week he was notified he had passed the test and may now consider himself a member of the bar, entitled to practice the profession of law.

Fellow townspeople will not be surprised at this news, because his extraordinary ability in this field manifested itself shortly after Richard began the study of law at the University of Santa Clara. He was a diligent student, possessed a natural flair for the subject, and won numerous honors therein, including the Redwood prize in 1936, for the best essay on history or politics, in 1937 a silver medal for conduct and application. In 1938 he won the Bancroft-Whitney prize—a set of law books, also in 1938 a medal in the moot court Coolidge competition and this year won the competition.

During the past year Richard has been law librarian at the University of Santa Clara, and has also been working for his master's degree at Stanford.

With the passing of his examinations, he intimates that, while he will open no office for some time, he will be glad to undertake any legal business that comes his way.

Judging from the reputations made by other Campbell schools graduates in the fields of science, pedagogism, medicine, and law, it is reasonably safe to predict that our young Mr. Morton will also enjoy a generous portion of success, and the Press is doubtless joined by the community in so wishing.

P. O. Open Sat. Afternoons Till Christmas

The Campbell post office will be open Saturday afternoons until after Christmas, Postmaster Ira Grim stated yesterday, and also on Sunday, Dec. 24, from 11 to 12 o'clock in the morning.

He also repeated the urgent request, Mail early, wrap parcels well and tie securely, and enclose no writing except names and a greeting.

Cambrian Folks Ask for Road

Letters from W. L. Bachman and W. Finnemore of the Cambrian district were filed with the board of supervisors last week, renewing the request of the district residents that the county acquire the old Almaden spur railroad right-of-way from the Southern Pacific for a direct road from Campbell to that community.

The plea was first made a year ago after the spur line to the old quicksilver mines in the Almaden area was abandoned.

Supervisor J. M. McKinnon said the county made an offer to the railroad for the right-of-way at the time of the first request but nothing had been heard about it. He also stated that since that time he understands that portions of the right-of-way have been sold to abutting property owners.

At the meeting of the board of supervisors Monday no action was taken on the matter.

P.T.A. Shows Pix As Gift to Pupils

The Campbell Grammar School P.-T. A., as a Christmas present to the pupils of the school, is sponsoring a moving picture, to be given in the auditorium tomorrow (Friday), once in the morning and once in the afternoon. The show will last about one hour and a half, so no other program has been arranged.

At 9 a. m. Friday, the high school glee club, under the direction of C. P. Klassen, will sing Christmas carols for students of the upper grades.

Civic Group Elects Dahl President

The Campbell Chamber of Commerce held its regular meeting Monday noon at the Waltrip restaurant, and many items of business were taken up, including the election of officers.

J. M. Dahl, local real estate agent, was elected president of the organization, Ira Grim, former head having resigned this post. Lowell Benson was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

S. N. Hedegard, chairman of the re-numbering committee, gave a report on his findings. Other members of that committee are Guy Farley and J. M. Dahl.

Dahl, who was appointed head of the police protection committee some time ago, gave a report at the last meeting, Nov. 13, at this meeting appointed as his aids, G. E. Farley, Dr. W. R. Morgan, S. N. Hedegard and W. H. Van Dyke.

Van Dyke, chairman of the safety committee, announced that a petition was to be circulated to the various groups, organizations and individuals of the town for the installation of stop and go signs at the school intersection, Campbell avenue and Winchester road. The section past the schools is now a 25-mile zone, but for the safety of students it was thought advisable to have the signs.

Dr. W. I. Merrill, who was appointed some time ago, as chairman of the speakers committee for Old Settler's day, is lining up a speaker for the morning program.

A whiskerino contest is being planned for that day also, and those entering the contest will start growing beards on Jan. 1.

For the evening performance for Old Settler's day, the chamber voted that the newly organized group of community players, should put on a play. Plans are already being made for the production.

Hi Students In "Huck Finn" Friday Night

The senior class of the Campbell Union high school will present a modern version of Samuel Clemen's famous novel "Huckleberry Finn," at the school auditorium, Friday, Dec. 15, at 8 p. m. The play is under the direction of Dean R. Chamberlin, teacher of dramatics at the school.

Taking the part of Huck Finn is Jim Strimpel and he, with his boon companion, Tom Sawyer (Bob Kitrell), will portray on the stage the typical American boy characters of the author.

The supporting cast includes Nedra Lawrence as Aunt Polly; Betty York, Ruth Watson; Phyllis Sidensol, Mary Jane; Jay Keesling, Fred Raymond; Lois Bohnett, Melba White; Billie Wasson, Clara Woppinger; Alice Modrey, Amy Woppinger; Eugene Green, John Finn.

Chorus to Sing Carols Outdoors

A unique entertainment is being scheduled for the nejoyment of people in this community; on Monday evening, Dec. 18, at 7:30 o'clock, there will be an outdoor program of Christmas carols by the community chorus, grouped about the steps of the library.

The program will open with a trombone solo by O. C. Nickols, and will include the chorus in a selection of Christmas numbers, led by C. P. Klassen, and a vocal solo, "Cantique De Noel," by Lloyd Nelson. Miss Edith Hughes will be at the piano.

The music will be readily heard by people who choose to sit in their cars, and chairs will be provided for those who wish them. The music will be over in time for listeners to attend the high school P.-T. A. card party.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—When we went into the World war, Sen. Smith W. Brookhart of Iowa said our crack riflemen would win for us if he were allowed to recruit and train them. Americans, he said, were born marksmen, and the rifle would be suited to our native genius. He was soundly patriotic and moving, as he worked in Daniel Boone and individual initiative, but his plea went unheeded—in fact, the senator's suggestion seemed amusing to most commentators.

Rifle Virtuoso Made Gun Our Army Mainstay

But, at that time, there was a young fellow popping off the conveyor belt ducks at Coney island with such accuracy that he became a virtuoso of rifle fire, and, in between war years, made the rifle the mainstay of our army firing power, just as Senator Brookhart said it ought to be. The Garand self-loading, semi-automatic rifle, tested by National Guardsmen at Camp Smith, Peekskill, has for several years been put down by military men as the world's most sensational achievement in light arms. The army took it over in 1937. It is the creation of John C. Garand, the young toolmaker whose earlier laboratory was a Coney island shooting gallery. It weighs only nine pounds, and fires 60 shots to the minute—one shot with one trigger-pull.

Young Garand made several models, embodying his basic idea, and sent one to the navy department at Washington. They planted him with the bureau of standards to continue his experiments.

Later, they sent him to the United States armory at Springfield, where in 1923 he brought through the deadliest small weapon ever made. It has been steadily improved since then, and, according to the most authoritative military judgment, has more than trebled our army's firing power. Automatic in all but the trigger-pull, muzzle gas is used to power it.

John C. Garand was born in a French-Canadian village, 20 miles from Montreal, and was brought to Putnam, Conn., by his father, when he was seven, after the death of his mother. He was the seventh of 14 children. He was a textile mill machinist at 18. In 1930, he married a Canadian girl. They have a boy and a girl. He is 52 years old, still a gunsmith at the Springfield armory.

THERE was once a hillbilly girl who went to a neighbor's cabin to borrow a hammer. She said, "Pappy's fixin' to build a house next fall." Over in Europe, they are "fixin'" to build a federated Europe, forehanded about it, as above, with the building apparently dependent on a preliminary wrecking job.

Europe Borrows Our 'World of Tomorrow' Idea

Within the last few days, plans for the grand remodeling have gone forward, with two sets of blueprints on each side of the west wall. Franz von Papen thinks the new commonwealth of Europe will be devised by Germany, while Paul Reynaud, French minister of finance, and his confreres in London, are making other arrangements. The wide range of planners swings from intellectuals, such as Julian Huxley, the British scientist, to the man of action, General Wladislas Sikorski, premier of the Polish government which is just now camping out in France.

General Sikorski, the latest matriculate in the peace seminar, visions a "consolidated Europe," but one in which a reconstituted Poland will somehow be happily encysted.

He is a soldier who became a writing, as well as a fighting man, also, with his gift of ready speech, an orator and politician. He was an effective leader of the war of 1920, when the French general, Maxime Weygand, helped the Poles stop the Bolsheviks, and he became premier in 1922 when he was replaced by Marshal Pilsudski as chief-of-staff. He was forced out in 1923, and in 1924 became minister of war. One of his first official acts was to forbid women workers in the department to wear silk stockings. He decreed dark, high-collared dresses, high shoes and cotton stockings. He is a strict disciplinarian.

A handsome and romantic figure of the old feudal Polish aristocracy, he took full account of modern conditions as he tried desperately to tool his country into modern statehood. Now, it appears, he would just skip it and take a chance on the world of tomorrow.

EUROPE:
Finnish Finish

Moscow civilians knew only that their Premier Viacheslav Molotov had first denounced Russia's nonaggression pact with Finland, and next had broken off diplomatic relations with that little republic. But a few minutes after the second step Russian troops invaded the Karelian isthmus; Russian planes bombed Helsingfors, Viborg, Imatra and Tammelsuu; Russian warships began tossing shells all along the Gulf of Finland's northern shore. The Finnish government, which only a few hours earlier had withdrawn frontier guards and pleaded for a peaceful settlement, resigned immediately and President Kyoesti Kallio declared war. But everyone knew the Russian juggernaut would swallow his nation in a few days.

All the world watched this outrage painfully, but only the U. S. took concrete action. The charge d'affaires in Moscow was instructed to offer mediation, but nothing came of it. England and France, busy at home, had no chance to help little Finland.

Most pained of all was none other than Adolf Hitler, who must have realized all too suddenly that Finland's death at Russia's hand made him Europe's most discredited ruler. Having staved off war on two fronts in September by making friends with Russia, Der Fuehrer had seen Joe Stalin come first into Poland, next into Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania, and now into Finland, always for "defensive" purposes. Against what nation but Germany would Russia need defenses? And how easily could defenses be turned into offensive positions. (see map).

The Reich had no alternative but to "sympathize" with Russia, but nobody was fooled. By not sympathizing, Germany would automatically fall in beside the allies against Russia, thereby discrediting Adolf Hitler. There no longer remained doubt about the position of Italy, erstwhile axis partner of Germany. Marshal Italo Balbo's Corriere Padano was outspoken in its admiration for Finland's opposition to "brutal pressure of the colossus with feet of clay."

Blockade

Magnetic mines and a valiant U-boat commander named Guenther Prien were worrying Great Britain almost to death. Commander Prien, whose submarine sank the Royal Oak October 14, came back to destroy a 10,000-ton cruiser (according to Berlin). Two days earlier the Nazi raider, Deutschland, sank the man-of-war Rawalpindi with a loss of 260 lives.

Magnetic mines, scattered helter-skelter from airplanes, were obviously a violation of the international law which demands that nations announce the location of their mine fields. But Britain's revenge was also a violation of international law: King George signed an order blockading all German exports on neutral ships, and within 24 hours the wrath of the world was on London. Japan, refusing to recognize the blockade, threatened to seize British ships. The Netherlands and Belgium protested. Greece, one-half of whose imports come from Germany via sea, faced an economic crisis. Hearing that Britain threatened to close the Suez canal, the straits of Gibraltar and the Dardanelles, Rome's Giornale d'Italia departed from Italy's noncommital attitude to offer food for thought: "The blockade is most dangerous. It may induce other people who are not yet participating in the war to . . . think that such a state of affairs cannot endure."

POLITICS:
Short & Snappy

If Franklin Roosevelt still hoped for a third term, he could take heart from the latest Fortune magazine poll, which claimed that 47.4 per cent of the voters want him to stay in the White House. Percentage before the war: 34.9 per cent.

Far bigger political news was the attempt of both Republicans and Democrats to jockey into position for the 1940 campaign. Each wanted to hold its convention after the other, so badly that G. O. P. Chairman John D. M. Hamilton announced the convention call would not be issued as usual, in December.

Successful at changing Thanksgiving, the President had his "spokesmen" observe that it might be a good idea to postpone both conventions from June to July—or even August. Reasons: (1) During an international crisis, a long campaign would bore the public and get small results; (2) economy.

JOHN D. M. HAMILTON
It was nice of the President . . .

Commented Chairman Hamilton the next day, not a little sarcastic: "Mr. Roosevelt's deep solicitude about economy in political campaigns is very amusing in view of his record . . . It seems to me the President is arrogating to himself a great deal of authority."

The jockeying continued. Mississippi's Democratic Sen. Pat Harrison wanted to defer conventioneering until September; Republicans like Michigan's Vandenberg and Oregon's McNary again hoped to hold their session after the Democrats.

NAMES ... in the news

Fritz Kuhn, German-American Bundsfuehrer convicted in New York of grand larceny and forgery, stood liable for a prison term of up to 30 years.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, hearing the Dies un-Americanism committee was seeking reds in the American Youth Congress, offered to testify to the contrary but was not asked.

Harold L. Ickes, secretary of the interior, who wants to take an armored tank down a "truck infested highway bumping these pests from the road," was requested to resign by the Indiana Motor Traffic association.

Edouard Daladier, French premier, asked extention of his power to rule by decree.

COMMERCE:
Rough Sledding

Only through broad international trade, said British Premier Neville Chamberlain a few weeks ago, can peace be assured. In Washington Secretary of State Cordell Hull echoed his words because he needed that argument to defend his reciprocal trade program. Since Europe went to war the U. S. has rushed to make treaties with South American nations whose Old world trade outlets have been cut off. The joker has been that South America's export surpluses, which she would exchange for U. S. manufactured products, cannot be imported here without damaging domestic markets of American farmers.

JOHNSON
Didn't like it.

One principle of the reciprocal trade program is that a low tariff concession granted any nation is immediately accorded all other lands which hold treaties. Hence, if the program keeps expanding, critics fear all U. S. tariff walls will be broken down, our self-sufficiency will be destroyed and the U. S. will become dependent on foreign sources.

Opened in Washington were hearings on a pact with Chile which would reduce tariffs on copper and beans, among other things. Since the reciprocal treaty act comes up for renewal before congress next session, it was noteworthy that three good Democratic senators (Colorado's Johnson, Arizona's Hayden and Idaho's Clark) protested. Said Johnson: "The trade program persecutes and undermines domestic enterprise . . . permits greater infiltration of foreign goods . . . trades off American jobs . . . replaces American taxpayers with foreign producers who pay no taxes here."

Even making allowance for any sectional interest these senators might have, it was pretty certain the trade act will have rough sledding in congress.

LABOR:
Anti-Strike Weapon?

Having at last settled the 54-day-old Chrysler dispute, organized labor turned its guns on the justice department for a much more important campaign. The target: Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, who recently advised that unions are punishable under the anti-trust laws if they (1) prevent use of cheaper materials; (2) compel hiring of useless labor; (3) enforce systems of graft or extortion; (4) enforce illegally fixed prices; (5) destroy an established system of collective bargaining.

ARNOLD
Labor was afraid.

A few days later A. F. of L.'s President William Green fired a protest at Attorney General Frank Murphy (whose appointment last winter was protested because he was "too friendly" to labor). Said the protest: "We do insist that the anti-trust laws cannot be invoked against labor organizations because these laws . . . do not permit prosecution." Labor's reasoning: That the Clayton act expressly exempts unions.

It took no Philadelphia lawyer to read the fear in labor's eyes. If the justice department is upheld in its present campaign against material dealers, contractors and union leaders in the building trades conspiracy case, the unions can be prosecuted in restraint of trade for all strikes.

CONGRESS:
Build-Up

By cutting expenditures in the face of increased revenues, the government hopes next year to put itself in shape for electioneering. Even so, the President admitted at Warm Springs that his planned economies are striking no impressive total. Actually, since Europe's war will necessitate a $500,000,000 boost in defense outlays, other items must be pared tremendously to hold down the total appropriation.

Recently the President announced that any decision on new revenues must be made by congress. That body could choose between raising the $45,000,000,000 debt limit (to be reached this year) or levying new taxes. So fearful was Mr. Roosevelt that his big defense program might be misinterpreted, that he told reporters it would be handled in a double budget: Congress will get the regular defense program first, followed by an entirely separate request for about $500,000,000 necessitated by wars in Europe and Asia.

Wiseacres in Washington thought they had the key to next January's weather vane: If big economies are in sight, new income taxes will probably be levied on middle and lower-bracket wage earners, producing a piddling $300,000,000 to $500,000,000. But if another big deficit is apparent, tax adjustments will go overboard and the debt limit will be boosted.

THERE was a time when the urgent invitation extended to the motion picture industry by Mayor La Guardia of New York to move to that city would have produced at least a ripple of interest in Hollywood. But not now. The motion picture potentates agree with the mayor when he says that New York's a city, that it is the center of the theatrical business and so has more actors than any other town—an important fact nowadays, when so many people are coaxed from the stage to the screen.

But none of the mayor's arguments can offset the fact that the motion picture industry has an investment of millions of dollars in its Hollywood studios, which couldn't possibly be moved to New York or any other city.

All previous bets on the best picture released in 1939 are off since the new Garbo film, "Ninotchka," (a gay adventure of a Russian Soviet girl in Paris), made its appearance — seems that everybody wants to vote for it. This is Greta Garbo's first venture into sophisticated romantic comedy.

GRETA GARBO

Once again Walter Wanger has changed the title of the picture originally known as "Send Another Coffin." After a time, as reported here, it became "City for Sale." Maybe someone decided that that title wasn't snappy enough to lure customers to the box office in droves, or perhaps there was some other reason for the change—after all, "City for Sale" does sound the least bit like a real estate ad. Now it's announced as "Ladies Know Too Much."

Meanwhile Tay Garnett is directing, and an excellent cast, which includes Pat O'Brien, Edward Arnold, Broderick Crawford, Ruth Terry, Ernest Truex and Janet Beecher, is going right ahead, bent on making a swell picture no matter what it's eventually called.

Rudy Vallee had some difficulty when he made his first appearance as major domo of the Charlie McCarthy program. When he had his own program, he'd sing a song, then turn around and conduct the orchestra. He was just about to do the same thing when he realized that he was a guest, and that the orchestra was in the very capable hands of Robert Armbruster. After all, habits formed over a period of 10 years are hard to break.

If Ruth Reece, the 10-year-old radio star, is one of your favorites you'd better make a note of the fact that she will appear in Monogram's "The Gentleman From Arizona," along with that old-timer, J. Farrell MacDonald, John King and Ruth Barclay. The picture, a Magnacolor film, is the first picture ever to be made entirely in Arizona, and features Rex Jr., the only trained Arabian horse in captivity.

"Scattergood Baines," leading citizen of Cold River, the hero of the popular series of magazine stories by Clarence Budington Kelland, will extend his stay on the Columbia network for another year. He and the other residents of Cold River became CBS stars in 1937, appearing in coast to coast dramatizations five days a week, from 5:45 to 6:00 p. m. eastern standard time. At first the series originated in Hollywood; when it moved to Chicago most of the actors moved with it.

It's just 10 years since "Molly Goldberg" first called "Yoo hoo, Mrs. Bloom" to her neighbor, in the very successful serial, "The Goldbergs." Mrs. Gertrude Berg, its author, had written trunks full of stories but never sold a line. Finally she got a radio station to air her serial. It's been going ever since, with Mrs. Berg as author, director, and portrayer of "Molly."

ODDS AND ENDS—Radio is no longer in its infancy, but some of its girl stars still think it's news when they learn to cook . . . Professor Quiz received 75,000 questions last week for a new high on the popular Battle of Wits . . . Joan Blondell doesn't like hotel coffee; she carries a percolator with her on trips, and makes her own.

Charming Frock For Little Ladies

THIS frock (8587) is so devastatingly becoming to fashion-wise moppets that you needn't be surprised if your own small daughter develops a slight superiority complex when she puts it on! From a high waistline, the full skirt ripples about her dimpled knees. The sleeves puff out like little balloons. There's adorable quaintness in the cut of the top. Pattern includes panties, and it's quick and easy to make.

Gingham, linen, batiste or challis are pretty everyday materials for this frock. A party version will be sweet in organdy or taffeta, dimity or dotted Swiss, with ribbon instead of braid for trimming.

Pattern No. 8587 is designed for sizes 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 years. Size 3 requires 1⅞ yards of 35-inch fabric for the dress; ¾-yard for panties. To trim with two rows of braid or bias fold requires 8½ yards.

Before Autumn was aware that there had come any change in the immobility of his posture, Bruce had seized her wrist and turned her bout so that she stood facing him.

"I should like you to know, just the same," he said.

As he spoke, he drew her violently to him. For an electrifying instant, she knew that all her resistance had crumpled within her and that she was responding to his almost brutal kiss with a fierce and overwhelming joy. Then, with all the strength of her arms, she beat against him, striving to tear herself away from his crushing embrace.

With a low laugh, Bruce grasped her shoulders and flung her from him, so that she reeled backward against the wall of the cabin. She stood, gasping in rage and terror, unable to speak, while he lighted another cigarette and lounged indifferently again on the table's edge.

"Now—you have the reason," he said. "You had better not come here again."

She looked across at him, unable at first to give place to the terrifying conviction that had come suddenly upon her. She had done more than cure him of his love for her—she had destroyed even his respect for her.

In a moment she was out of the door into the blindness of a dying sky, a dying world, into a forlorn space that was hollow with the moan of death.

CHAPTER XI

Autumn had gone to the drawing room immediately after dinner and had seated herself at the piano. During the hour she had sat at the table with her father, she had done her best to bring him out of his solitary brooding. But her own frame of mind had been too desolate to make the task easy. She was sorry for him, inexpressibly so.

For weeks Autumn had watched him fighting alone, retreating before the heartless bludgeonings of his own conscience, recovering himself again and beating his way back to a position of self-respect and renewed faith in himself. And always Autumn knew that his love for her was the one precious thing in his life. It was because of her, the daughter of Millicent, that he refused to give up the fight, and because of the memory of Millicent that lived in her.

It was only natural, perhaps, that he should be blind to the fact that by his stubborn struggle he was drawing his daughter into the conflict. He had thought to avoid that by keeping her where she would never have known of it. Had she been content to remain in England, Jarvis would have fought through to the end and died in the comforting knowledge that she could at least begin her own life and live it as she pleased, without the unhappy heritage of the past.

And now another evening was coming serenely to a close, as though the stars of the night before, when she had gone alone to see Bruce, had not shrunk out of the sky, as though all beauty had not become ashes in her heart. Jarvis had gone to his library after dinner, and Autumn sat at the piano, her hands lisping idly over the keys, her eyes inattentively noting the blue dusk that stole from the open window and made a strange, impalpable color of a great bowl of yellow roses.

Presently her hands fell from the keyboard and lay listlessly in her lap. At a sound from the hall, she turned and saw her father standing in the doorway, his cigar in his fingers, his eyes fixed upon her with an unwonted tenderness.

"What was that you were playing, Autumn?" he asked after a moment.

"That was Grondahl's 'Serenade,' Da," she told him.

"I've heard you play it before—and I've asked the name of it," he said, "but I can never seem to remember. Play it again. I like it."

He came into the room and went to a large chair that stood to one side of the French windows where he sat gazing out into the fitful light of the garden as Autumn played. When she came to the end at last, he did not speak, and Autumn got up and moved to the console where the roses stood. She caressed an opulent, full-blown, yellow bloom with thoughtful fingers.

"No more music?" Jarvis enquired at last, a wistful note in his voice that hurt the bruised part of her being.

"Perhaps—later," she said quietly.

"Aye," he said, "I suppose one must be in the mood for it. But that bit, now—the one you just played—means something. It brings a light to one when he hears it."

Old Saint Pat ambled into the room and settled himself on a rug at his master's feet. Autumn left the roses and walked to a chair near her father's.

"Da," she said gently, "what would you say to my going back to Aunt Flo?"

The Laird turned slowly in his chair and looked at her across his shoulder. She glanced at him insouciantly, almost without interest in how he should respond to her question. She had really not meant it for a question so much as an announcement.

But the helpless, almost childlike look of dejection that appeared promptly in his eyes gave her a moment's disquietude.

He bent forward and clasped his hands. "You wish to go, Autumn?" he asked, his voice grown wistful.

"Da," she replied, "one can't always do just what one would like to do. I came here because I wanted to—and I've managed to make a mess of everything since I've come.

Jarvis sighed heavily. "I'm sorry, my dear. It hasn't been your fault, either."

"It's the fault of no one in particular," Autumn said. "It was just in the cards."

"Aye. I know. You're still thinking of Geoffrey's son. Isn't that it?"

"I'm thinking—of everything," she responded. "I can't go on living here—with things as they are. I've done my best, Da—or my worst, perhaps, you would say. It will be easier for everyone concerned if I get back to the other side of the world."

She got up again and went to stand before the window. There followed a long silence burdened with the impasse to which their emotions had come. She heard her father clear his throat with a deep rumble, and then she knew that he had risen and was coming slowly toward her.

His hand lay for a moment gently upon her shoulder, but she did not turn to look at him.

"I'm sorry, my girl," he muttered. "I cannot tell you how sorry I am. I had hoped—somehow—that you might be happy here—after a time—in spite of everything. I had hoped for too much, it seems."

"I had, too," Autumn replied. "But it wasn't to be."

"I shall miss you more now than ever," Jarvis said, and then, after a long silence: "But you must not stay because of that, Autumn."

"You are making it easy for me to go," Autumn said, somewhat abruptly in spite of herself.

The old man went back to his chair. "Autumn," he said at last, "don't be impatient with me tonight. I'm tired—and your music—"

"I didn't mean that, Da," she said quickly and went to him at once.

The Laird's head sank forward, his eyes staring out upon the garden. "I'd be just as glad if I could make it easy for you to stay," he said. "Sometimes I think you—"

His voice stopped and he swept his eyes with his hand. Autumn threw her arms around him and pressed him close to her in silence. Presently he freed himself gently from her embrace.

"You think of your father as a coward, Autumn," he said stoutly. "I may have more courage than you know. Yesterday—when the boy came to see me—I thought I might tell him—tell him all that I told you one night upstairs there. I have my senses still, and I can see things still—with my own eyes. All your silly carrying-on this summer with that mad crowd of Elliot Parr's—it didn't blind me to the truth. I've known from the first what was behind it. I've spent days and nights thinking about it. And when the boy came—before he came to me, I thought—I thought—the right thing to do would be to tell him—so that he'd know—so that he'd understand. Then, I thought—he could do what he liked—and you could do what you liked—and I wouldn't raise a hand to stop it, one way or the other. But—there's no way of accounting for these things, it seems. He came to me—and he stood there as if he had been Geoffrey Landor himself—proud, insolent, careless—and I offered him money for the loss of his sheep. I don't think I expected him to take it—but his manner stirred something in me. It stirred the bitterness and the hatred and the pride that have filled me for twenty years—and I turned him out!" He paused for a moment. "And now—I am turning you out, it seems."

"No, Da," Autumn protested, "it isn't so. You mustn't say that. I am going back—as I told you—because I think it will be best for us all."

Jarvis Dean drew himself up. "Have him over—tonight—in the morning," he said. "Bring him here—and I'll tell him. I'll tell him all I told you. When he has heard—"

"Father, please!" Autumn pleaded. "That would only hurt Bruce—and it would only hurt me. You would be doing that for me, and it would be quite useless. If I love Bruce Landor, it's only another of my silly blunders. I'll get over it—with the ocean between us it ought to be easy. I'm not so hopeless that I shall go on forever breaking my heart over someone who doesn't care for me."

The Laird raised his head and looked at her. "You mean—he—"

"I mean—he doesn't love me, Da," she said, smiling down at him, "though there's nothing so strange about that."

Jarvis was thoughtful for a moment. Then he got up quickly and stood looking at his half-smoked cigar. "I didn't think he'd be such a damned young fool!" he said.

Autumn laughed suddenly, but the Laird looked at her sternly. "It'll be as you say, then," he said. "It's better so. I'll sell up in the fall and join you."

He patted her shoulder in awkward and inarticulate compassion, and turned away. She could hear his retreating steps on the polished floor, heavy and measured and pondering. To her defeated spirit, it seemed that those footsteps sounded the inexorable, iron stride of the past crushing down the present and the future.

She looked out upon the blurred garden with eyes dull in resignation.

During the days that followed, Jarvis Dean's spirits were lighter than they had been for months. To be sure, it was not pleasant to think that Autumn was leaving the place to which she had come such a short time ago, her heart swelling with anticipation of what the future held for her, her mind full of plans for the new life she was entering. He was sorry for her. And yet, the irking uncertainty of those weeks had been almost more than he could bear at times. Autumn's decision to return to the Old Country had relieved him of that, at least. His own resolve to sell everything and follow her as soon as it could be managed without too great a sacrifice had brought its regrets, its pang of loneliness, but that had passed. He had a clear road before him now. He would leave behind him the past and all its burden of unhappiness and spend the rest of his days in a manner befitting a man of ample means whose declining years might easily be his brightest.

"I've done my best, Da—or my worst."

It was some such feeling that possessed him as he looked at Autumn now, sitting opposite him at the breakfast table. He had ordered an early breakfast so that he might leave in good time on his journey into the hills to inspect his flocks and to take up some supplies to old Absolom Peek. Tom Willmar had been making the trips back and forth during the summer, but Jarvis was in the habit of going himself at least once during the season. Besides, he had given instructions to have the young Irish lad, Clancy Shane, drive out the few hundred sheep that had been culled from the range and were being brought down to be sold. He wanted to spend a half hour with the boy and assure himself that everything was coming along as it should.

"You might make the trip in with me today, Autumn," he suggested, "if you have nothing else to do. It would be company for me and the drive would do you no harm."

"I thought of it last night," Autumn said. "It will be my last chance to see the flocks before I leave."

"Aye—that's so. Well, get yourself ready and I'll wait for you."

"I'll change in a jiffy, Da," she said, and left the table.

"Put enough lunch in the box for the two of us, then," Jarvis told Hannah. "We'll be back for dinner late."

They were on the road before the day was more than a bright flame on the eastern hilltops and Autumn was guiding the car over the smooth trail at a speed that made her father grip the edges of the seat with both hands.

"The trail will be rougher higher up, Da," she explained once when she glanced sideways at him and saw the grim set of his face. "We'll make good time now and loaf later on."

Noon brought them within sight of the small flock that Clancy Shane was bringing down from the upper ranges and Autumn waited in the car while her father walked down into the valley. Half an hour later he came back.

"I think I'll stay along with Moony," he said. "If you want to go along by yourself and have a word with Absolom, you can pick me up on the way back."

"I'll do that, Da," she said. "Have you any message for Absolom?"

"Just give him the box of stuff there in the back of the car and tell him I'll be up myself maybe in a week or two."

Autumn started the motor and put her hand on the gear shift.

"Here, now—wait a bit!" Jarvis shouted. "We'll eat first."

For a full hour, Autumn and her father talked and laughed together as they had not done since she was a child. When she got up to go at last, Jarvis went with her to the car and leaned over to kiss her before she started away.

"So long, darling," Autumn called as she put the car into the trail again. "I'll be back before you know it."

Jarvis stood shading his eyes against the mid-day sun, until the car vanished around a bend in the trail, and an inexplicable sadness came over him. He had been too happy for the past hour. He turned and picked his way slowly down into the valley.

It was not until Autumn's visit with Absolom Peek had come to an end and she was preparing to hurry away that she found the courage to tell him that she was bidding him good-by for the last time. She had stayed with the old herder much longer than she had planned.

"You'll be comin' up again, like as not," Absolom said as they strolled together toward Autumn's car.

"I'm afraid not, Absolom," she told him. "I'm never coming again."

"Eh?" The old man looked at her in surprise.

"I'm going back again—to England, Absolom."

"Now, now! What's wrong, eh?"

"There's nothing wrong, Absolom. I'm just—out of place here."

Absolom thrust his fingers under his weathered hat and scratched his head.

"Well, well," he said at last. "It isn't much of a place for a young girl, I know. It'll go hard with the Laird, I'm thinkin', losin' you again just when he's got used to havin' you round."

Autumn hesitated before she made her reply. After all, it would do no good to tell him that her father had decided to spend the rest of his days abroad.

"I haven't been much of a help to him, I'm afraid," she replied.

"He's past help, that man," Absolom said suddenly. "Not but what he's been a great man in his day. But he's not livin', Miss Autumn."

"Poor Da," Autumn murmured. "He hasn't had an easy life."

"That's right enough. He hasn't. But he won't make it easier by packin' you off to that—"

"He's not sending me away, Absolom," she hastened to assure him. "I'm going because I want to."

Absolom regarded her quizzically. "There's more behind it than that, I'm thinkin'. Though I'm askin' no questions, mind."

She was staunchly cheerful in her farewell to Absolom, but a hot mist came between her eyes and that unforgettable picture there on the hillside below them. And then, in a moment, she was gone and old Absolom had turned again to his solitary task.

Very late that night, when Autumn lay awake and allowed her mind to drift sleepily back over the journey into the hills, it seemed to her that what she had beheld in the cycle of that day had been sunrise and sunset on the moon, or on some bizarrely landscaped planet hitherto only a fantastic dream in the mind of man. Early morning had clawed great, long scars of black valley down the pale, colossal faces of the hills, frightening and thrilling in their report of what this land had been in ages gone. Noon had made insubstantial islands of the mountain tops, swimming in their mists as on the white lambency of some primordial sea. And in the twilight, the dark patches of pine that marked the valleys in that broad expanse might have been the spoor of creatures unthinkable, in an unthinkable chaos of the earth.

No more of that now! Back again to the artificial, the purposeless life she had known with Aunt Flo. Forget that there had ever been anything else. Forget the reverent somber brow of a mountain bared to the moon. Forget a star unfolding like a bloom of sweet loneliness in the luminous, unnameable color of a summer sky. Forget the drift of mountain rain in the spring, and the flamy torches of Indian paint brush on the gaunt hills. Forget Bruce Landor, and the curious, heartless, dear ways of love, forever.

CHAPTER XII

On an evening within a week of the time set for Autumn's departure, Florian Parr telephoned from Hector Cardigan's place and invited her to go with him to the Hospital Benefit Ball that night in Kamloops.

"Linda is here with me," Florian said. "I had to come up on business, but I see no reason why we shouldn't mix in a little pleasure with it. We brought our duds and we're all dolled up. We haven't seen anything of you for two weeks. I'll run out in the car for you if you say so. How about it?"

"I don't know, Florian," she temporized. "I'm not much in the mood for it."

"Oh, come on!" he urged her. "Where's your community spirit? The natives will never forgive you if you don't support the cause. Hector has promised to chaperon us."

Florian laughed in a meaningful naivete which nettled her disproportionately.

"Even you think I ought to have someone to look after me," she replied.

PEACE HAS ITS PRICE

Keeping peace in a warring world confronts America with grave responsibilities. One of the greatest of these tasks is to adjust herself safely to the changes which war in Europe and neutrality legislation at home have brought about.

The loss of foreign markets, an enormous increase in expenditures to strengthen the nation's sinews of defense, the enforced idleness of a large section of America's merchant marine, the beaching of thousands of maritime workers—all these make pressing demands upon the nation's resourcefulness, for peace, too, has its price.

Revealing but one example of that, the maritime commission last week announced that the neutrality act—wisely banning American-borne commerce from dangerous war zones—will mean the withdrawal of 92 vessels from our regular foreign trade, and the abandonment of eight foreign trade routes on which the government has spent over $195,000,000. Cost of maintaining the idle 92 vessels, representing an original investment of $203,000,000, will run to about $10,000,000 yearly. In gross revenues, the American merchant marine stands to lose $52,500,000 yearly .

Measured against the stupendous costs of war, with its destruction of life, liberty, and happiness, the price of peace may not seem overwhelming. Even so, repayment of its price is one of the great, immediate tasks facing the country. The discovery of new markets at home, the elimination of unemployment, an intensified drive for recovery—these are all part of the job.

Factional quarrels and the clamoring of special privilege cliques cannot accomplish it. Only a true sense of national unity, a common will guided by the common purpose of "the greatest good for the greatest number," can banish partisanship and make a united America in every way equal to the great responsibilities confronting her today.

SANTA GETS HIS ORDERS

Holly berries and Christmas carols proclaim the Yuletide season, and in politics there are signs that Santa's sleigh would be taxed beyond capacity were he to answer all the Christmas-time hopes voiced there these days.

Having emerged from their political pow-wows and announced their presidential ambitions, aspirants to that office devoutly pray that next Christmas Eve will find them with one foot virtually on the White House doorstep.

Recognizing an earnest wish of a large section of the public, Mr. Early, White House spokesman, offers a gift himself in announcing a desire for economy, and no new taxes, is evident in the administration.

On the other hand, Marriner S. Eccles, federal reserve board chairman, indicates the Christmas gift he would like: income taxes on now exempt single persons earning less than $1000 a year, and on married persons earning less than $2500 yearly, also now exempt.

Could Secretary of Agriculture Wallace have his way, Santa would fill farmers' stockings with an additional billion dollars to put John Farmer on a level with other major income groups. And Mr. Wallace would ask for more Christmas spirit and less trade warfare in transportation so that consumers and farmers might be saved millions of dollars.

There are the requests! Now if only Santa would produce the answers!

WHY CHRISTMAS SEALS?

One of the great triumphs of modern medical science has been its relentless—and increasingly successful—battle against tuberculosis.

Once known as the "great white plague," that disease is now in slow but constant retreat before the powerful ministrations of medical research and care. Today science knows both the cause of tuberculosis and how to control it. Only lack of funds stands in the way of complete eradication of the disease. Were sufficient funds available to hospitalize all cases needing attention, within six years—according to one conservative prediction—tuberculosis could be banished completely.

Christmas seals offer each of us a ready means of hastening the conquest of a foe of a stronger, healthier America. Much progress has already been achieved. Since these seals first appeared in 1907, the tuberculosis death-rate in the United States has been reduced almost 66 per cent. Yet despite this remarkably encouraging record, it still remains the leading cause of death for persons between the ages of 15 and 45.

Every letter bearing Christmas seals, by that fact bears a message of goodwill to our fellowmen less fortunate than we. As emblems of the spirit of the Yuletide season, these Christmas seals bring true gifts of hope and cheer to others.

DAN CUPID SULKS

Dan Cupid and the doctor are at outs with each other.

Instead of collaborating in friendly fashion to the mutual advantage of the cool, critical eyes of the scientific newcomer, romantic Dan has been pocketing a good many of his arrows.

The result has been to send California's marriage rate tumbling. Since passage of a state law this year requiring pre-marital health tests, a marked decline has set in. In October, reports Dr. W. M. Dickie, state public health director, the rate dropped 30 per cent under the October 1938 figure.

Nevada has captured a moderate share of the orange blossom ceremonies which California has been missing in recent months but, in the main, prospective newlyweds have just been staying at home.

Whatever the reasons for their sit-by-the-fire behavior, we count on them soon to realize one fact: that medical science is really a friendly ally and not a foe.

Its sole aim in this case is simply to assure long life and happiness to Dan Cupid.

ALL GUMMED UP

Just the other day a psychologist announced that, according to his findings, gum-chewing acted as a sedative, helped ease tense nerves, and was frequently conducive to work.

New York is today ready to vouch for the last part of that report. It kept a crew at work for six months, doing nothing but scraping gum off the walls, floors, and seats, of subway stations. The men have quit. "They just couldn't keep up with the chewers," officials sadly reported.

The city fathers of the nation's biggest metropolis estimated last week that it required hundreds of thousands of dollars yearly to keep its public buildings, sidewalks, and park benches ungummed. On a lesser scale, what other cities couldn't report being "stuck up" in the same way?

Decidedly, gum-chewing is conducive to work—for others!

Symbolic Portent Of Pyramid Told

E. E. Pomeroy of Los Gatos described the Great Pyramid at the Kiwanis meeting Tuesday, stating that it apparently had not been designed as a mausoleum, but has many scientific and prophetic significances.

Ray Bishop was chairman for the day. Next week that honor will be divided between President W. R. Morgan and Ira Abbott, general chairman for the children's Christmas party.

Thirty-five youngsters will be guests for the dinner, and will be entertained by A. C. Heinsen of the San Jose Technical High school, who will deceive the eye with sleight-of-hand tricks.

Yule Program At Moreland

Moreland school will hold its Christmas celebration this evening in their auditorium, with a cantata-pageant, "The Glory of Christmas," Principal Hart Concannon has announced.

Directed by Miss Gussie Hintz, assisted by Mrs. Mildred Crist, all 60 pupils of the school will participate, with the school orchestra, the rhythm band, Lois Barbano, accordionist and Lena Benevento, vocal soloist, entertaining during intermission.

The speaking parts in the pageant will be taken by Inez Santos, Ermalind Vieira, Mitzuko Ogata, Lois Barbano, John Bagatella, Lillian Kurasaki, Eva Benevento, Regina Smith, Edna Dunham and Lena Benevento.

We and Our Neighbors will hold a regular meeting Saturday, Jan. 16. Mrs. Walter C. Magneson, Mrs. Meta Skemp and Miss Bernice Arperich are the scheduled hostesses for this occasion.

Campbell Union high school officials last week announced the completion of the track around the football field. The track has a six inch rock base with two inches of treaded redwood bark, two inches of course cinnabar and clay, and two inches of fine cinnabar and clay. The track was built by WPA labor. The coaching staff of the school hopes to hold a league meet on the track, which is claimed to be one of the best in the state.

Honor Group To Picnic At Alum Rock

Members of the Campbell chapter of the California Scholarship federation are planning a picnic at Alum Rock park on Saturday afternoon, Dec. 16, unless the weatherman intervenes with a shower.

The federation has had two meetings recently to discuss plans for the outing. The group will leave at 1:30 in automobiles provided by Mrs. F. R. Rambo and Mrs. J. W. Knowles. Everyone will eat lunch before leaving, but will take food for an after-dark weinie roast, to be followed by marshmallow toasting and perhaps dancing.

The club expects to spend the main part of the afternoon hiking on the hills and up to the water falls, the favorite destination of all picnickers.

They plan to return home between 8:30 and 9:30 that night.

"Huck Finn" to Be Presented Friday Night

"Huckleberry Finn," which will be presented at the high school auditorium Friday night, has been more widely read than any other of Samuel Clemens' works. And there has never been any controversy over the fact that this is the greatest American story ever written. "Huck" is the most lovable of all humans, a typical American lad with all the human qualities that have endeared him to all lovers of real, clean entertainment.

The players have assembled an excellent cast: Jim Strimpel, who will portray "Huck" is a fine choice for the role, as is Bob Kittrell who will appear as Huck's pal, "Tom Sawyer."

Don't miss this sparkling performance of a great play, and be sure to tell your friends the date —Friday night, Dec. 15.

Dutch Humorist Assembly Guest

The national assemblies brought Tuesday morning, Dec. 12, at 9 o'clock to the Campbell high school, Roeland Van Cavel. This Dutch humorist presented "The Story of Holland." This was a most unique presentation which was entirely new to schools of America.

Mr. Van Cavel, in his native costume, sang Dutch songs, and danced the clog in wooden shoes.

This program was the second feature of the series of programs presented by national assemblies. Students were charged five cents for admission. Those who did not attend the program had to go to the study hall.

Dads' Night Held by P.T.A.

Fathers' night, sponsored by the high school P.-T. A., was held last evening, Dec. 13, at 8 o'clock in the new auditorium. The theme of the Christmas program was, "Enriched Living Through Self-Realization."

Mrs. Harry Rediker, P.-T. A. president, opened the meeting, after which Mrs. E. E. Coonradt, chairman of the day, took charge.

It was announced that the lighting fund, to be used to light the tennis courts, had reached $275.

First, the orchestra under the direction of A. A. Thielke, played four numbers, followed by the processional, in which the choir, directed by C. P. Klassen, sang "O Come, All Ye Faithful." Next, the a cappella choir sang three numbers.

The announcement of the book week contest winners was then announced and the awards presented.

After this, the orchestra played another piece, followed by the Girls' Glee club singing "O Little Town of Bethlehem."

The a cappella choir then sang three numbers, and the program closed with a tableau under the direction of Miss Mary Lewis.

Tubers Collected For Clubwomen

Big potatoes! Small potatoes! Potatoes of all shapes and sizes made their debut yesterday in the Campbell high school's study hall where the Girls' League placed a box for the express purpose of collecting a potato from every student as he or she entered the study hall.

The potatoes went to the Women's Service club, where they will be put into Christmas baskets for Campbell's less fortunate.

Ground Prepared For New Lawn

The school lawn is at last beginning to take shape.

The north side of the grounds is now being worked on. The ground is yet to be dragged and the fertilizer spread, but the work is progressing rapidly. The seed, which has not yet been bought, will be planted sometime during the next few weeks, according to Mr. DeSelle and Mr. Johnson, custodians.

On their first meeting in December the Senior Hi-Y club voted five new members into the club.

They are Jim Harris, Glen Libhart. Charles Presto, Emmet and Henry Cleaveland. The new members will be initiated during the Christmas vacation.

Her Christmas Tree

Her toys are scattered on the floor;
The wrappers lie around.
She smiles at all her precious dolls,
And other things she found
Upon the Christmas tree.

She talks into her telephone,
Then starts to ride away
Astride her little tricycle
That found its place today
Beneath the Christmas tree.

She rests before her new dustpan,
Then goes to get her broom,
But stops to take her tricycle
For a spin around the room
That holds the Christmas tree.

She waves a tiny, chubby hand
,While passing Santa Claus,
Then turns and rides right back again,
Then she and dollies pause
To watch the Christmas tree.

She toys with bits of tinsel rain,
And plays with fallen snow,
Then pops a piece of chocolate
Into her mouth with, "Oh,
I love this Christmas tree!"

Classes Study Court Procedure

Miss Eunice Reader's social studies classes have been studying court procedure. As an actual demonstration the class held a court trial.

The case was filed by Barbara Broadbent against Raymond Benich for burning her dog's house and injuring the dog. She complained that he threw a cigar on the dog's house while the dog was asleep. The dog did not get out till the fire was burning well. Benich denied setting fire to the house by saying he did not smoke and proved this by his witness. The jury, composed of thirteen students, brought in a verdict of not guilty.

The plantiff's attorney was Richard Cook and was assisted by John Williams. The defendant's attorney was Charles Murphy and his assistant was Alfred Hansen. Masuye Idehara was the court's reporter and reporters for the newspaper were Doris Sanda and Mary Hart.

Campbell Choir Attends Festival

The Sixth Annual A Cappella Choir festival sponsored by the music department of San Jose High school was held in the San Jose Civic auditorium last Friday night at 8 o'clock.

The 11 choirs, numbering about 600 singers in all, were on the main floor of the auditorium, making a colorful spectacle in their robes.

William Erlandson of San Jose State college led the combined groups in the first number which was "Praise Ye the Lord." The choirs then came forward and sang individually under their own directors.

The Campbell group, under the direction of C. P. Klassen, sang "Clear and Calm Was the Holy Night' 'and "Carol of the Russian Children."

When each choir had sung, Mr. Erlandson led the entire chorus in five numbers.

Reserves Plan Candlelight Rites

The Senior Girl Reserves are going to hold a candlelight recognition ceremony Tuesday, Dec. 19 at the home of Marilyn Toy.

Lorene Hoerner is the chairman and will be assisted by Marion Jacobson, Nora Brydon, Lois Bohnett, and Jewell and Jeaneatte Abbott.

EDITORIAL

As we students attend school and participate in the many activities open to us at Campbell high, we sometimes accept our privileges without stopping to realize from whence they have come. We know, of course, that the taxpayers of our district have made our new school possible. But there are many bits of equipment which are essential to a well-balanced school program which have not been included in the regular school budget.

If one were to inquire he would find that there is a group of parents and teachers which, although it has stayed in the background, has constantly been working to aid the school and its student body. When the chorus needed new gowns this group not only provided the material but made the gowns. Later when the school rest room was in need of cots they were procured. Now that our tennis courts have been completed, a modern lighting system is being installed to make it possible to enjoy the courts at night.

Campbell High School's P.-T. A. has been responsible for these benefits and others too numerous to mention. We students take this opportunity to express our appreciation.

—Gladys Larson.

Six-Man Ball Started At High

Intramural sports have begun again and this time the boys are concentrating on six-man touch football. For the last two weeks the teams have been fighting it out for leading honors.

Each gym class has entered two teams in the intramural league: one composed of boys in the 110 and 120 divisions; and one made up of boys in the 130 and unlimited divisions of boys' athletics.

The complete standings of the league are:

Campfire Group Works On Dolls

Dad's socks seemed to be getting most of the attention at last Thursday's meeting of the Tawasii Campfire group of Campbell. The socks, made into dolls of different nations, will be distributed at Christmas by Campfire Girls.

Songs to be sung at Christmas are being rehearsed. Song Leader Betty Jurras has selected some beautiful carols for the group to harmonize on.

M. E. Church to Give Xmas Play

A Christmas play is to be presented at the Methodist church, Friday, Dec. 22.

The play is entitled "The Christmas Window" and the cast includes Gerry Lloyd, Madeline Burns, Tom Farley, Don Robertson, Glen Brunswick, Grady McCorkle, Clarence McCorkle, and Dorothy Keesling.

Mrs. E. R. Kennedy is the director.

Merry Christmas

The staff wishes to take this opportunity to wish each and every reader of the Campbell Press a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Cards Split Pair With Petaluma

In the opening games of the current heavyweight basketball season the Campbell quints split a double header with two tough Petaluma five's.

The 130 pound team opened the program by squeezing out a close 26-23 win over the northerners. This contest was very close with the lead being exchanged by the teams several times. Kawamota and Triana were high point men for Campbell with six points each. Schuster was top man for Petaluma with nine points.

The starting line-up was Carvelho and Kawamoto, forwards; Miranda, center; Parker and Silva, guards.

In the finale the Petaluma unlimited team beat out a stubborn Campbell five 36 to 28 after a thrilling game. The team from up north led at half time 16 to 15. Although Campbell only held the lead once it was a nip and tuck game till the final gun. "Andy" Livicich had a field night as he led the scoring with 15 points. Mainwaring was high man for Petaluma with 13 points.

The Campbell lineup was Livicich and Hartley, forwards; Carvelho, center; and Libhart and Packer, guards.

Special Election To Pick Couples

Friday, Dec. 15, a special election is to be held at Campbell high school. The Oriole staff wants to print a picture in the yearbook of a couple posing. The students were asked in assembly last Tuesday by Loren Smith, business manager for the Oriole to nominate both boys and girls, preferably with a "C" average, for the ballot.

He said that there were numberless prospects and that they wanted many nominations. From these candidates about ten boys and ten girls will be chosen for the ballot. The boy and girl who have the majority will pose for their picture to be printed in the Oriole.

Timothy's Timid Letter to Santa

Dear Santa:

Today is today. Tomorrow (or a few days after) is Christmas! I have been a perfect person for almost a month even if those Campbell high teachers did give me N's in Citizenship and Personality and Its Growth!

To get down to the reason for writing this letter (it's a polite way to let you know what I want).

I want one car (that's all I'll need for a few months).

I'll need a few accessories for it such as pillows, curtains, and a girl friend (blondes preferred).

I would like a book of practical jokes (mine are getting worn out).

I need a tuxedo in case I get that accessory for my car (the blonde one).

Oh yes! A few little things such as typewriters, radios (for my car) and a swimming pool (you can put it in the back yard; there's not enough room in my car for it).

Thanks a lot.

Sincerely yours,
Timid Timothy

Captains Elected For Girls' Teams

The girls' basketball teams of Campbell high have been organized and captains have been chosen.

The four gold teams are led by Jean Corning, Violet Acker, Marilyn Anderson, and Margaret McCulloch. Lydia Lane, Mary Nakagawa and Helen Bogner are the captains of the Red teams, while Bernice Robbins, Hazel Salacci, Claire Lobrovich and Irene Speno will lead the Blues.

The first game will be held on Jan. 4. It has not been decided which teams are to play.

Quickly Made Dolls For Late Gift Choice

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

HERE is a boy and a girl doll that you can make quickly. The body is two tubes of material made of fabric stitched together to simulate socks and shoes and then stitched, turned and stuffed as indicated at the left of this sketch. The head is a two-inch ball of cloth covered first with cotton and then with tightly stretched cloth sewed in the back as in steps 1 and 2. The wig is made as in step 3.

The diagram shows how the tubes and the head are sewn together. Sew across the top of the legs to make the doll jointed. Sew the arms down and the tips of the feet up as indicated. Sew clear through the head when adding the bead eyes about half way between the top and bottom. This shapes the cheeks. A few stitches in red make the mouth. The pleated skirt is cut straight. The trousers are slightly shaped in the crotch. The sweaters are made from the striped tops of children's socks.

NOTE: The 10 cent edition of Sewing Book No. 4 is now ready for mailing, as well as the 10 cent editions of No. 1, 2 and 3. Mrs. Spears has just made quilt block patterns for three designs selected from her favorite Early American quilts. You may have these patterns FREE with your order for four books. Price of books—10 cents each postpaid. Set of three quilt block patterns without books—10 cents. Send orders to Mrs. Spears, Drawer 10, Bedford Hills, New York.

Facts as Bricks

Facts are no more widsom or knowledge than a trainload of bricks is a habitable house. The bricks are necessary to the house, but if we want to turn them into a house we must know something of the technique of building. We too must learn how to use facts.—Sir Norman Angell.

Rumblings Over Federal Spending Come From Two Different Sources

One Side Proposes Policing U. S. Operations; Another Insists Wanton Outgo Must Continue; Secret Memorandum Offers Program for 'Rebuilding America.'

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—Rumblings have begun to occur again lately about federal spending. Some are for, but most of them are against, continued outgo of federal funds. They have come from widely separated schools of thought, as might be expected when there are those in the government who favor unlimited spending and those who believe in watching government finances with an eye to the future. I will try to piece them together for you.

Senator Taft, Republican, of Ohio, an avowed seeker after the nomination for President, and Senator Adams of Colorado, a Democratic member of the senate committee on appropriations, and therefore influential in policy-making, seem to be agreed that spending has got out of hand. They are proposing something in the way of a policing of government operations, and obviously such policing will be done by an agency of congress.

Secretary Morgenthau of the treasury has been going to some lengths to have the country know there will be no violation of the present national debt limit. It is now fixed by law at $45,000,000,000. The national debt is approaching $42,000,000,000, in direct obligations of the federal government as distinguished from the four or five billions of debt incurred by federally owned corporations. Many persons feel this debt must be considered as a part of the public debt. Anyway, Mr. Morgenthau says there is no real reason to believe the $45,000,000,000 limitation will be reached before next June 30, the end of the fiscal year.

President Roosevelt has sent around word to the various departments that their spending in the next fiscal year must be curtailed to some extent. He did not mention a balanced budget which he said a few years ago should be accomplished in 1940, but he took the position that the deficit in the next fiscal year should not exceed $2,000,000,000. That is, the spending for all purposes, under the President's present conclusions, shall not exceed recipts from taxes and other general revenue by more than $2,000,000,000.

Secret Memorandum Calls For Additional Spending

While the statements from the senators were being chewed over and while the word about Mr. Roosevelt's determination was sinking in, it was disclosed that a memorandum about future government spending was going the rounds among the so-called New Deal thinkers. The authorship of the memorandum has not been made known. None will admit where it came from or where it is going beyond the fact that it was being circulated for the information of those high in administration circles who desire that thought shall be given to next year's political campaign.

Stripped of all of its excess language, the secret memorandum points out a program for "rebuilding America," for building up America. Incidentally, and only casually, readers of the memorandum are told through its entire length that there must be additional federal spending in execution of this program. But haste is made to assure us that there should be no worry about additional spending—amount not named—because the borrowings can be paid back "out of increased income of our citizens."

And the war figures in it, too. The author of the memorandum observes that America "may be the last remnant of civilization." It has a special duty to all of the world, therefore, and the thinking element wants to make sure that our nation is ready to assume this new burden. There are many paragraphs of argument in the secret memorandum in support of the position that our nation must be "restored" and those who put it together reluctantly admit that it will take a great educational campaign to accomplish the rebuilding. What better opportunity can be afforded, then, according to the memorandum, than the election campaign of 1940. So, in case you are still ignorant; in case you do not realize the leadership the United States must accept; you may be fully educated next year by speeches and propaganda. This certainly will make you understand how important it is to spend more money out of the federal treasury.

Tighter Hand on Government Spending to Be Laid Down

There can be no doubt that relief spending will have to be large again in the next year. It cannot be avoided. Business is not doing any better. It is not employing more people, or to state it another way; unemployment is just as great as ever, and people must be fed.

Mr. Roosevelt has indicated that while spending for relief cannot be dodged, there are other phases of governmental activity that may be curtailed. As to this, however, one might ask a pertinent question. It will be recalled that the President anticipated a reduction, a saving, of $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 would result from the government reorganization. The civil service commission and treasury figures, lately made public, show that there has been an increase of approximately $100,000,000 for general expenses since reorganization was ordered. It seems in order then to ask how there can be curtailment, except and unless there is a willingness to abandon some of the numerous agencies of government along with the functions they perform.

It is in line with the idea of curtailing expenditures, however, that Senators Taft and Adams spoke. They mentioned profligate and unwise spending. The old leaf raking jobs that former Relief Administrator Hopkins sponsored, I believe, can be cited as an example.

The blasts by Senators Taft and Adams, along with the constant criticism of waste by Senator Harry Byrd, the Virginia Democrat, must be accepted as portending a change. It seems to me to be a very important sign, and a healthy one. When members of congress get up in arms sufficiently, they naturally take quite a following of public support with them. My own hunch is that in the observations of Senators Taft and Adams there lies the germ of a great governmental reform. It may not come in the next session of congress, nor even in that which convenes in 1940, but I am quite convinced that a tighter hand on government spending is going to be laid down by congress.

Describes How Government Appropriations Are Made

To make the circumstance clear, it probably is well to describe how appropriations are made. The national budget, of course, is framed by the budget director under the direct supervision of the President. The budget director gives each agency a chance to submit estimates on the amount of money its officials think it needs. They are given the opportunity in hearings to justify their figures. The budget director considers their arguments and adjusts the amounts on the basis that he believes is proper and for the good of the nation.

The budget eventually is submitted to congress. There, the appropriations committees go to work. They examine all of the estimates for expenditures and eventually call in officials of every agency seeking an appropriation and listen to the story about the programs and the funds needed. The committee then makes up its own mind, and its figures are laid before the house and the senate.

That seems a very fair way. Experience, however, indicates there are better methods. The reason the system fails is because of bureaucracy. Every government official and every agency wants to expand operations, power and influence.

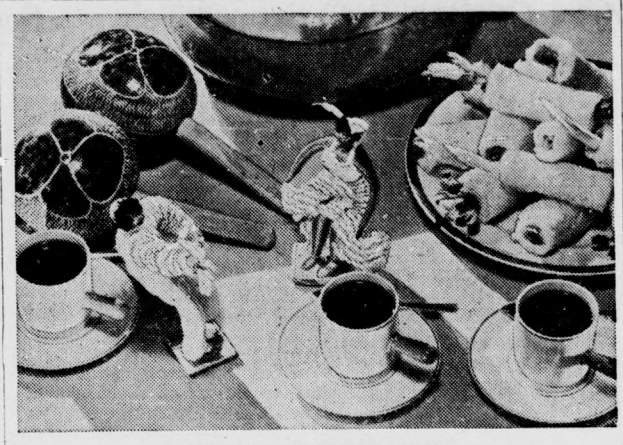
Thus, when Senators Taft and Adams propose policing federal expenditures, they have started something that may eventually result in development of a new arm of the congress.

Adroit in Building Up Sentiment With Money

Most observers here have long known that the new crop of spenders that now occupies the key positions have taught the old timers something fresh in the way of gaining congressional approval of appropriations. They are adroit in building up sentiment back home when it comes to teasing people into line. But they are adroit only when they can use money. It has been plain that ordinary political methods can not be used successfully by the so-called inner circle of the government. And for the reason that they can not use time tried methods—not being politicians who have hustled for votes—they are doomed tc failure.

The surprising thing about the whole situation is that President Roosevelt has been convinced so many times. The President is a right clever politician. He has flopped several times very badly, but he will get along in most any political company, especially if he has the aid of Jim Farley. The fly in his ointment is that he has turned all too frequently to the inner circle of advisors and has ignored Farley and the others, such as Farley's former trust advisor, Emil Hurja. The inner circle does not like Mr. Hurja, and it is their loss.

Now, that the flurry about the United States getting into Europe's war has blown over, I believe it is the consensus that the inner circle group have turned again to a variation of pump priming and "spending our way out of the depression"—tc the cultural field.



FOR THE NEW YEAR'S PARTY

(See Recipes Below)

Foreign Parties Are Fun

For your New Year's eve party, why not plan one that is foreign in flavor? Whether you like to sway to the rhythm of the rhumba, or prefer swing, you'll find a rhumba party with a menu of Cuban delicacies, full of charm for your guests.

There are all sorts of amusing, inexpensive favors to give an authentic note to your rhumba party decorations—little pottery figures and tiny dolls dressed in Cuban costumes; and for noisemakers, a pair of maracas, those gourd-like rattles filled with seeds that rhumba orchestras shake to emphasize the beat of the music, and tiny wooden castanets that the dancers manipulate with their hands as an accompaniment to their steps.

Refreshments, too, can be distinctly Cuban. A dish that has gained fame among visitors to Cuba is rice with chicken—"Arroz con pollo." With rolled sandwiches and plenty of coffee, you have a delicious, satisfying supper.

The Cuban idea of coffee is small cups and plenty of them, filled with strong, black coffee. If you like, use decaffeinated coffee, so that your guests can drink many cups in the Cuban manner, without fear of sleepless hours later. Remember that decaffeinated coffee needs a little extra brewing to bring out the rich flavor.

After-Dinner Coffee or Demi-Tasse.

(Extra Strength)

Use 1½ heaping tablespoons coffee, regular grind, for each cup (½ pint) of water. Make by any method desired. If using decaffeinated coffee, drip grind, measure well-rounded tablespoon instead of heaping tablespoon.

Arroz Con Pollo.

(Chicken with rice)

Cut a chicken into small pieces and wipe dry. Melt ½ cup butter or other fat in a saucepan and fry the chicken and a cup of diced sliced ham, uncooked, until golden brown. Add a cup of canned tomatoes or tomato paste, half a dozen small olives, a teaspoon of chopped parsley and salt to taste. Then add ½ cup of rice. Brown the rice lightly, stirring constantly. Then add 1 cup of boiling water and cook slowly, in a casserole in the oven, keeping tightly covered, until chicken is tender and rice is done.

Vegetable Salad Bowl.

1 head lettuce (cut in wedges)
Raw spinach leaves (coarsely chopped)
1 cucumber (peeled and sliced)
1 green pepper (cut in rings)
1 bunch radishes (sliced)
Onion (cut in very thin slices)

Prepare vegetables and dry thoroughly in clean towel. Chill. Place all the vegetables in a salad bowl and toss together with well-seasoned french dressing. Serve at once.

Garlic Bread.

Slice French, Italian, or white bread in thick slices to, but not through, the bottom crust. Crush one clove of garlic. Add to ½ cup of butter and heat over a low flame for about 5 minutes. Strain out the garlic. Brush slices and top of the bread with the garlic butter. Heat in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees) for about 15 minutes. Serve at once.

Rolled Sandwiches.

Cut fresh bread in thin, even slices. Trim off crusts. Spread with soft butter or with any desired filling. Roll and fasten with toothpicks. Place sandwiches in a deep pan, and cover with a cloth wrung out of hot water (this must not touch the sandwiches). Let stand for 15 minutes. Just before serving, tuck a sprig of watercress into one end of each sandwich, for garnish, and remove the toothpicks.

An Italian "Help-Yourself" party is a grand idea for informal entertaining—especially when you plan to have a crowd. Cover tables with brown wrapping paper in place of linen, or use coarse cotton tablecloths in red and white checks.

In the center of each table place a basket or a wooden bowl of fruit, to be served, later, as dessert.

Menu

Italian Spaghetti
Vegetable Salad Bowl Garlic Bread
Fresh Fruit
Coffee

Italian Spaghetti.

(Serves 8)

1 can imported Italian tomatoes (large)
1 can tomato paste
⅔ cup water
¼ teaspoon soda
Salt and cayenne pepper to taste
½ cup olive oil
1 clove garlic (grated)
1½ large onions (sliced)
½ cup parsley (chopped)
1½ pounds ground meat (beef, pork and veal)
1 package spaghetti (approximately 8 ounces.)
1 cup grated Italian cheese (bulk preferable)

Strain tomatoes, add tomato paste, water, soda, salt and pepper. Place olive oil in frying pan and add garlic, onions and parsley. Fry in the oil until lightly brown. Add meat and continue to fry until it is cooked through. Combine the above two mixtures and simmer about two hours. Stir frequently.

Meanwhile, cook spaghetti until tender in large quantity boiling water (salted). Serve tomato sauce over spaghetti and top with grated cheese. Serve very hot.

Coming, Next Week!

All this talk about entertaining this way and that, and not a word so far about planning parties for the younger members of the family! Something must be done about that right away—and next week Eleanor Howe will do it—with an entire column devoted to young people's parties.

You'll find lots of recipes for holiday entertaining in the specially prepared leaflet "Holiday Recipes," by Eleanor Howe. You'll find old favorites, and brand new recipes, too, for Christmas cakes and cookies, plum puddings, and confections. Frequent Cleaning Is Protection for Woodwork

Interior woodwork finish will last longer and look better if subjected to frequent and thorough cleaning.

It may be kept clean by periodic removal of surface dust and by preventing the formation of grease film. Woodwork should be washed or cleaned when dusting is inadequate. For cleaning varnished or painted surfaces, solvents that will attack the covering must be avoided as well as abrasive preparations.

A good quality of soap will usually do a satisfactory job. When the paint is flecked, marred, or discolored, it is necessary to resurface the woodwork.

Refrigerator Tips

Perishable food always should be placed in the refrigerator as soon as possible. Raw fruits and vegetables are best washed first under running water and the outside of milk bottles wiped with a damp cloth. Left-overs should be cooled, if necessary, and placed in spotless, tightly-covered containers to keep odors from escaping and uncongenial flavors from mixing. Foods with strong odors, such as cheese, if put into the refrigerator, should be kept on a top shelf.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Tiled hearths and fireplaces should be washed in hot soapy water, then, when quite dry, polished with a little furniture-cream, used sparingly. Finally, polish with a soft duster. If greasy or soot-stained, add vinegar to the water.

Quick Action for SORE THROAT FROM COLDS NOW!

Amazing relief of painful symptoms begins in a big hurry when you use Bayer Aspirin this way

Follow these 3 steps as pictured

1. For sore throat from cold, dissolve 3 Bayer Aspirin Tablets in ⅓ glass of water and gargle. Pain is eased very quickly.
2. To relieve headache, body discomfort and aches, take 2 Bayer Aspirin Tablets and drink a glass of water. Repeat in 2 hours.
3. Check temperature. If you have a fever and temperature does not go down—call your doctor.

Both aches and raw throat relieved this convenient way. Saves hours of discomfort.

At the first sign of sore throat from a cold follow the directions in the pictures above—the simplest and among the most effective methods known to modern science to get fast relief.

The Bayer gargle will amaze you—easing throat rawness in a hurry. And the Bayer Aspirin taken internally quickly relieves the other painful cold symptoms.

Try this way. You will say it is unequalled. But when you buy be sure you get the fast-acting Bayer product you want. Ask for Bayer Aspirin by its full name.

Evil Habits

Where evil habits are once settled, they are more easily broken than mended.—Quintilian.

There's a Good Reason You're Constipated!

When there's something wrong with you, the first rule is: get at the cause. If you are constipated, don't endure it first and cure it afterward. Find out what's giving you the trouble.

Chances are it's simple if you eat the super-refined foods most people do: meat, white bread, potatoes. It's likely you don't get enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean a lot of food. It's a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but leaves a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines and helps a bowel movement.

If this is your trouble, you should eat a natural "bulk" producing food—such a one as the crunchy, toasted, ready-to-eat cereal—Kellogg's All-Bran. All-Bran is the ounce of prevention that's worth a pound of emergency relief. Eat it every day, drink plenty of water, and "Join the Regulars." All-Bran is made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Is the Universe, Including Man, Evolved by Atomic Force?" will be the subject of the lesson-sermon Sunday, Dec. 17, in all Churches of Christ, Scientist.

The golden text will be: "All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord; and thy saints shall bless thee. They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power" (Ps. 145: 10, 11).

Other Bible citations will be included in the service, as well as readings from the Christian Science text-book.

The Ada Rebekah lodge held its election of officers recently and named Mrs. Lottie Rice noble grand; Mrs. Josephine Keesman, vice grand; Mrs. Ellen Arnold, financial secretary; Mrs. Lillian Ohlen, recording secretary; Mrs. Margaret Wilson, treasurer, and Mrs. Anna Bachman, trustee.

Saturday evening Miss Barbara Lou Shaves had the misfortune to lose a book of tickets for a baby show to be held in San Jose soon. The loss will be reported to the management of the show and the tickets will become void, but Barbara would appreciate the return of the tickets to her at 398 West Campbell avenue, or the book may be left at the Press office.

The FARMERS CORNER

by RALPH H. TAYLOR
Executive Secretary Agricultural Council of California

California vitally needs a broad, basic declaration of public policy with regard to labor relations—a new Magna Charta of sound fundamental principles which will safeguard the rights of the public at large, as well as those of workers and employers.

In that statement, almost every thinking, unbiased California citizen will concur, for public patience has worn thin under a constant battering from selfish minorities, contemptuous of the public's rights and the state's welfare.

It has become painfully apparent, however, that both the Wagner act and the national labor relations board, instead of remedying a bad situation, has served to aggravate it—due to the fact that both are one-sided and incapable of protecting the public interest. And it is even more apparent that labor czars of the Harry Bridges stamp, despite growing public indignation, are still arrogantly determined to trample on the rights of others in pursuit of what they consider their own rights and the rights of their followers.

The recent tie-up on the waterfront in San Francisco—one of a long series of labor wars in the bay area, which has extracted heavy toll fro magriculture, merchants, the buying public and tens of thousands of others who are not party to the disputes—is a current example of the condition that must be remedied if California ever is to re-achieve any measure of prosperity and security.

Representatives of California farm groups, in an effort to cope with the problem, recently drew up a tentative declaration of policy for submission to their respective organizations, which charts a course toward a definite "bill of rights" that recognizes the rights of everyone concerned.

Basic principles of this new "Declaration of Independence" are:

1. That every individual should be free to join or not to join any organization without coercion of any kind.

2. That every American citizen has the right to work when the opportunity offers, without paying tribute to any individual or organization, unless he freely and without coercion chooses to do so.

3. That the people of the state have a major interest in strikes because of the economic effect upon the lives of all the people, and have a right to know the facts about strikes and a responsibility to see that fundamental justice is adhered to in all settlements.

4. That the owners of any business have the inalienable right to manage their own business, free from dictation by workers or any others not responsible for the successful outcome of that management.

With these basic principles in mind, the farm representatives—including leaders from the Farm Bureau federation, Agricultural Council of California, agricultural Committee of the state chamber of commerce, the associated farmers, Consolidated milk producers, California Wool Growers association, and other farm groups—also drafted three specific recommendations, which will be submitted to their memberships for concurrence and as a basis for an active campaign of education.

These are:

First—No compulsory closed shop or hiring hall.

Second—No secondary boycott or "hot cargo."

Third—Free flow of commerce and no stoppage of public services pending settlement of controversies.

Doubtless there are other planks which could be properly added to this platform designed to promote better human relations and to terminate violations and abuses of the public welfare. Perhaps some of the principles listed need clarification or amplification. But the fact remains that a start has been made in the right direction—and not only California farm groups, but the much sinned-against public at large, should aid in seeing that such a code is put into effect. Public opinion, once aroused, can end the disgraceful debauch of labor excesses in California more effectively than any other force. And it is high time for the public to assert itself.
